9 A. M.:

(To Murat.) At last the veil is torn; the enemy have begun their retreat towards Magdeburg. March as rapidly as possible with Bernadotte's corps on Dornburg, a big village between Jena and Naumburg. Above all, get your dragoons and cavalry there.

All the heavy cavalry and General Klein's command are marching on Jena. I think that the enemy will either attempt to attack Lannea at Jena or else slip away. H they should attack Lannes, you can support him from Dornburg, I shall reach Jena at two in the afternoon.

W A.M.?

We have caught the Prussian army in the act, and have turned its flank.

At niffht, bivouac near Jena:

(To Marshal Ney,) The enemy are between Weimar and Jena; push your corps on as far an you can get, HO m to reach Jena early to-morrow,

14th, Jena:

Marshal Augereau commands the left.

At dawn Marshal Lannes will have his artillery in the intervals and in the order of buttle in which he paaned the night.

The Guard will l>e behind the plateau, in five lines.

The Emperor will give the signal; every one must be ready at dawn.

Marshal Ney will Ixs placed at the edge of the plateau, so as to move on Marshal Lanne*' right an soon an the village in carried, and wa get enough space to deploy.

Marshal Soult will debouch on the right.

15th, S A. jr.: (To Josephine.) Dear friend: I have
